

Last year I formed part of my school's Youth Against Human Trafficking Club, which works to raise awareness about human trafficking and raise funds to aid organizations who fight against it. I participated in an interview which was included in the Youth Underground short film. This made me realize that human trafficking is not something that happens only in dangerous and underdeveloped countries but that it happens everywhere and more often than we believe. I hope that this documentary reaches as many people as possible since the world is still mostly ignorant to this serious issue.
